July 18, 2001 at 10:34 AM EDT

SYDNEY, Australia, July 18 /PRNewswire/ -- Teradata, a division of NCR Corporation (NYSE: NCR), has been chosen by Optus as its exclusive standard operating environment for data warehouses and data marts for the next three years.

Optus, an Australian leader in integrated communications with more than five million customers, will use NCR's Teradata(R) warehouse product.

Charles Kent, sales director, Australia, for the Teradata Division of NCR said, "We are delighted to have been entrusted with the enterprise data warehouse strategy for Optus and look forward to working with them to implement their strategy. Managing the flow of information in an organization such as Optus and putting it to work in the extremely competitive communications industry is the kind of job Teradata was designed to do."

Julia Bowen, director of programmes, Optus, said, "Part of this process involved reviewing our data warehousing capabilities. As a result, we have selected NCR Teradata as our exclusive standard operating environment for data warehouses and data marts for the next three years. This agreement is the first step in implementing our new enterprise data warehousing strategy to better service our millions of customers who use hundreds of different products and services. We look forward to reaping the immediate benefits of Teradata's world-leading technology."
